

Henri Lebasque (1865 – 1937) was a French post-impressionist painter. He was born at Champigne, Maine-et-Loire. His work is represented in French museums, notably Angers, Geneva (Petit Palais), Lille (Musée des Beaux-Arts), Nantes, and Paris (Musée d'Orsay). He started his education at the Ecole régionale des beaux-arts d'Angers, and moved to Paris in 1886. There, Lebasque started studying under Leon Bonnat, and assisted Ferdinand Humbert with the decorative murals at the Pantheon. Around this time, Lebasque met Camille Pissarro and Auguste Renoir, who later would have a large impact on his work. Lebasque's vision was colored by his contact with younger painters, especially Edouard Vuillard and Pierre Bonnard, founders of the The Nabis Group, who were the Intimists that first favoured the calm and quietude of domestic subject matter. From his first acquaintance with Georges Seurat and Paul Signac, Lebasque learnt the significance of a color theory which stressed the use of complementary colors in shading. Lebasque was a founding member of the Salon d'Automne in 1903 with his friend Henri Matisse. Two years later, a group of artists exhibited there including Georges Rouault, André Derain, Edouard Vuillard, and Matisse. Lebasque also became friends with artists such as Gustave Rouault, Raoul Dufy, Louis Valtat, and Henri Manguin, the last of whom introduced Lebasque to the South of France. His time in South of France would lead to a radical transformation in Lebasque's paintings, changing his color palette forever. Other travels included the Vendée, Normandy, and Brittany. Henri Lebasque was called the painter of joy and light, by both critics and artists. He was admired for the intimacy of his themes and the unique joy in his colors and forms. Lebasque had some commercial success during his lifetime. He worked on the decorations at the theatre of the Champs-Élysées and of the Transatlantic sealer. Lebasque died at Cannet, Alpes Maritimes in 1937. Twenty years after his death, the Musée des Ponchettes in Nice presented the first retrospective of the works of Henri Lebasque.
