

A Dictionary of Quotations from Various Authors in Ancient and Modern Languages, With English Translations (Classic Reprint)

Lord Hillsborough (of whom, as a father, you may justly indeed feel proud) I venture to hope, that in the prosecution of his classical studies, he may find in the following pages, many quotations deserving of his attention, and not a few maxims that will appear worthy of being treasured up, as valuable moral guides, and in perusing which, at a leisure moment, he may say, in the words of a favourite author of your Lordship s, Condo et compono, quae mox depromere possim. May he, iny Lord, being heir to the exalted honours, and princely possessions of his noble father, emulate his example in the morality and probity of his life, and consider that, to rival his many virtues, will form his proudest claim to true nobility!! I have the honour to be. With the utmost respect and with unfeigned esteem. My Lord, Your much obliged and faithful serant, H. MOORE.
